Voicemail Script

V1.0 · USE AFTER THE DIALER MARKS AN LVM CALL

When to leave one

Leave a voicemail on the first attempt if it goes to voicemail — never on consecutive attempts. Two LVMs back-to-back read as harassment; one LVM and a follow-up email reads as professional persistence.

After leaving the voicemail, mark the lead LVM in the dialer. The system timestamps it so you know when to follow up.

The script — under 25 seconds

YOU "Hi, this message is for the owner of [business name]. My name is [your first name], I'm calling from NEPA-PRO — we're a veteran-owned construction and tech company in Northeast PA, and we just spun up a new platform that builds websites and mobile apps specifically for [industry] businesses like yours."

YOU "I'd love to show you what it looks like — takes about three minutes. Give me a call back at (570) 677-7971 when it works for you, or shoot me an email at service@nepa-pro.com. Either way, thanks for your time. Have a good one."

Do, don't, and why

| DO                                                  | WHY                                                      |
|-----------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------|
| State your name and our name                        | TCPA identification requirement applies to voicemail too |
| Mention the industry by name                        | Anchors that this isn't a generic spam blast             |
| Give the call-back number twice if voicemail allows | People miss the first one                                |
| End on something warm                               | You may never speak to them, but they'll hear your tone  |
| DON'T                                               | WHY                                                      |
| Say "I'm following up on..."                        | You're not — first call shouldn't pretend otherwise      |
| Drop pricing or specifics                           | That's the discovery call's job                          |
| Promise to call back                                | Makes them ignore your second attempt                    |
| Leave more than 25 seconds                          | They'll skip; you've trained them to ignore future calls |

Follow-up rhythm

- ☐ Day 0 — first call, voicemail (mark LVM)
- ☐ Day 0, +30 min — short follow-up email (use the Email Follow-up template)
- ☐ Day 3 — second call attempt at a different time of day
- ☐ Day 7 — short text (use the Text Follow-up template)
- ☐ Day 14 — final call attempt; if no response, mark Lost with reason "no answer x4"
